NEWSLETTER

Spring 2011

Travelling the World Since 1951 → Leading Tours Since 1970 → Publishing Newsletters Since 1978

Dear Fellow Traveller:

I want to thank everyone who sent messages of concern for my wife Yuriko's family during the recent catastrophic events in Japan. Fortunately, three of her four sisters live in the Tokyo area. The one who lives in the nearby countryside went without electricity and running water for a week, and while it must have been unpleasant, it was nothing compared to what some people went through. Poor Japan! A triple whammy, and the danger is far from over, with radiation entering the ocean and the atmosphere. Almost every evening Yuriko and I are glued to the Japanese TV channel, watching the latest updates. Our hearts go out to the victims. It's just as well that I postponed my tour from this year to next, since nobody in their right mind is thinking of visiting Japan at the moment.

And speaking of postponing tours—something I seldom do—the continuing turmoil in North Africa and the Middle East has forced me to shelve my October 2011 tour to Morocco. As I've said a number of times in these newsletters, my travel partners and I place your safety and comfort ahead of all other considerations. We won't lead tours to any region where unrest is prevalent or even anticipated. I'm looking forward to visiting Morocco when things have settled down.

As a seasoned traveller and keen observer of the world for more than fifty years, I've seen governments fall and tyrants come and go. I wasn't in the least surprised when Egypt erupted. But I was surprised at how fast the demonstrations spread. During the ongoing turmoil, several people have enquired about my right-hand man in Cairo, tour guide Fouad Salah. Fortunately, he and his family have not been adversely affected. He tells me his first tour group after the uprising arrived just two weeks later. It remains to be seen what the eventual outcome will be in the Middle East, but already tourists are flocking back to Egypt, eager to take in the ancient sights. My last tour there was wonderful, but fond as I am of Egypt, I won't be going back again. I've made nine trips there over the last several years, and that's enough.

I've recently returned from another trip to Uganda, a land of infinite variety and beauty. It was my second tour in eighteen months, and I enjoyed it so much that I'm planning one last trip there, in March of 2013. Particularly exhilarating were the boat trips on Lake Victoria, the Kazinga Channel between Lake Edward and Lake George, and the Nile. We saw multitudes of birds, including Egyptian geese, cormorants, pelicans, yellow-billed storks, goliath herons, fish eagles, a variety of kingfishers—malachite, pygmy, giant, woodland, and pied—and heavens knows what else. We also saw monitor lizards, elephants, buffalo, waterbucks, hippos, and crocodiles, both in the water and on the ground. At a camp in Queen Elizabeth Park we got some good shots of Henry, the resident hippo. Later at that same camp, a leopard coughed and prowled right outside my tent in the middle of the night!

At Mweya Safari Lodge, a gorgeous place with a stunning view from the swimming pool over Kazinga Channel, there was a family of banded mongoose (two were mating), and two semi-tame warthogs strolling around the grounds as if they owned it. All part of the fun of an African safari. You never know what you're going to come across next.

On this adventure, it took only an hour of bushwhacking in the Bwindi Impenetrable Forest to find the gorillas. When I was last there, in 2009, it took a challenging three-and-a-half hike to reach them, which left me knackered, for it wasn't long since I'd had hip surgery.

This time I stayed behind with two tour members. (Seeking the gorillas is an optional excursion, and the principal reason many travellers go to Uganda, but not everyone is up to what may be a strenuous hike, whose length depends on where the gorillas are.) I took a walk in the nearby hills, where I saw a banana gin distillery in action and visited a medical clinic, as well as a "faith healer" (not to be confused with a witch doctor) who used leaves and plants to make sick people better.

A few days later, in Kibale National Park, we came face to face with the chimps fairly quickly. After a while they clambered down from the tall trees where they nest, and walked and sat among us. Like the gorillas, they're still wild, but habituated to humans. They showed no fear of us. It's an awesome and humbling experience to see the shy, gentle gorillas and the cheeky chimps up close in their natural environments. It should be on everyone's bucket list. I'll be taking another tour to Uganda in March of 2013. UPCOMING TOURS—My September tour to central and eastern Europe is filling up, with only a few places left. Visiting some of the most fascinating places in Europe, this tour goes toward the end of summer, when most of the crowds have disappeared. It includes the great cities of Warsaw, Vienna, and Berlin, where I spent several of my teenage years. I've been back twice in recent years to see Checkpoint Charlie and our old house in Miquel Strasse. If you like the history, culture, and music of Europe, you'll enjoy this trip. Call Samantha of Collette Vacations.

should be of particular interest to someone with a limited budget.*

I'm replacing my Morocco tour with a safari in Kenya this October. This thirteen-day tour is a really good deal, and should be of particular interest to someone who's always wanted to do an African safari but has a limited budget. (This tour is shorter and therefore less expensive than my usual Kenya and Tanzania tour, which will next run in 2012.) We'll see some of Kenya's most amazing destinations, such as the rugged terrain of the wildly beautiful Shaba National Reserve, where Joy Adamson raised Elsa the lioness, Lake Nakuru, famous for its flamingos, and the rolling hills of the fabled Maasai Mara, where we'll almost certainly see all Big Five (elephant, lion, rhino, leopard, and buffalo) and the great migration of wildebeest and zebra. However, there's a small catch: to qualify for the low price on the group air tickets, we can't make any diversions or extensions. We all have to go and come back together. We expect this tour to sell out early, so call Felicity at Safari Studio now for a brochure. And to get an idea of what to expect, look at my Kenya photos at www.skillansafaris.com/david-skillan-slide-show.html.

My November tour of Cambodia and Vietnam, which includes a couple of days in Bangkok, Thailand, is another that offers great value and should have people licking their lips in anticipation. As an old Asia hand, I'm very fond of the Far East. Back in the early 1970s, I was the company's man in Bangkok for five winter seasons. I travelled all over India, Sri Lanka, China, Hong Kong, Singapore, the Philippines, Taiwan, and Cambodia. In fact, for my first few years in Canada, I was known for my tours to Asia. I've lived in Thailand and Singapore, and led at least forty tours to this exotic region. If you like Oriental food, as I do, you'll have plenty of opportunities to sample an array of mouthwatering local dishes on this tour.

My January safari to Botswana has become a favourite tour of mine. I'm completely enamoured of this magnificent wilderness. Its higher price (compared to my other safaris) is because we fly from camp to camp in light aircraft, instead of driving, shortening travel time and seeing much of the country from a bird's-eye perspective. Over the last several years I've led eight tours there, and I never grow tired of it. It's Africa at its best—superb, intimate camps with delicious food, and extraordinary bird and wildlife. There are few nicer things in life than an exciting day on safari or sightseeing, knowing you'll sit down to a fine dinner at the end of the day, followed by a comfortable bed in spectacular surroundings. That's always the way it is on our Botswana safaris. We already have lots of interest in this tour, which has room for just twelve participants, so you must book soon. Check out my Botswana photos at www.skillansafaris.com/david-skillan-slide-show.html and read "Botswana—The 'In' Place for Safaris" at www.skillansafaris.com/newsletters/botswana-safari.pdf.

After our freezing February, I'm considering a tour next February to Costa Rica, another land of great contrasts. It will be a twelve-day tour at a reasonable price. If you'd like to escape one of our coldest months and see some extraordinary bird and wildlife (from toucans, hummingbirds, frigate birds, and parrots to anteaters, howler monkeys, and three-toed sloths), let me know soon, so I can set this rewarding tour in motion. It will be my seventh and final trip to this exotic destination. Watch for details in my summer newsletter.

Another favourite tour of mine takes off next March, when we head to South Africa, with a side trip to Victoria Falls in Zambia. Parts of South Africa are lovely beyond description. For sheer variety, sumptuous accommodations, good food, and an excellent price, this twenty-day tour is unbeatable. We'll visit the beautiful city of Cape Town, the scenic Garden Route, Port Elizabeth, Durban, and Pretoria, with all the must-see sights along the route, including the well-known game parks and reserves of Addo (famous for its elephants), Hluhluwe (known for its abundance of white rhinos and other big game), and Kruger (one of the world's largest national parks, where we usually come across packs of the relatively rare, lithe wild dogs). If I'm not mistaken, this will be my twenty-first trip to South Africa, an achingly beautiful land, and another place I never tire of. I once spent a year working in the Cape, and it's among my favourite memories. If you want to see what may be the most diverse country in Africa, enjoying a varied itinerary of cities, beaches, game parks, and scenery, this is the tour for you.

You may have noticed that I've rescheduled my 2012 Japan trip from May to April. It's a slightly nicer time to go. It's widely expected that tourism will quickly bounce back, and the Japanese people will be anxiously waiting for the tourists to return, though it will be years before the area most devastated will be as it was before. Our itinerary doesn't include any of the places affected by the recent earthquake and tsunami. If Japan is still in the doldrums six months from now, I may replace this tour with a twenty-one-day tour of New Zealand, my favourite country, for approximately $5,000 per person. Please let me know as soon as possible if you may be interested.

I was hoping to do a tour of Newfoundland and Labrador this summer, but there were few inquiries, so I'm not proceeding. I'm going with friends, instead.

FUTURE TOURS—All good things come to an end sooner or later, and nobody knows that better than me. From next year on, these will become my farewell tours. Here's a reminder: from 2012 to the end of 2014, as well as the trips already listed, I intend to host tours to Ireland, Ethiopia, Ecuador and the Galápagos, Uganda, Zambia, Australia and New Zealand, Greece, and China. And maybe, if I can squeeze it in, a tour to Timbuktu in Mali, a place I've always wanted to see that has so far eluded me.

A SAFARI BY ANY OTHER NAME—Wild Africa Safaris, the company that has sold my African tours for many years, has joined forces with another well-established African tour operator, Travel Studio. The new company is called Safari Studio. The North Vancouver address and telephone numbers remain the same, though the website and email addresses have changed. Yes, Chris, Felicity, Melissa, and Michelle are still there, joined by Clive and Helen, ready to serve you.

NO WAITING—A year ago I signed up for Nexus, and a good deal it is—$50 for five years. Now I don't have to wait in line at Canadian airports and highway border crossings. I flash my Nexus card and pass quickly through. Express booths have been installed in the arrivals area of YVR, which means I no longer have to join the queue to see a border agency officer, making life so much easier, especially when I'm tired. As both these new services are designed to facilitate customs and immigration formalities and reduce long lineups, we're all encouraged to use them. It does take a few weeks after applying online or by mail to get a Nexus card, and you do have to go for what I'd call a casual interview, but if you do a fair amount of travelling, it's worth it.

*There's a responsibility clause in most travel documentation that says anyone who impedes
the smooth running of the tour may be removed from the tour.*

SILENCE IS GOLDEN—I'm writing this on behalf of tour managers and tour guides around the world. We all have our idiosyncrasies and hang-ups. One thing I can't stand when travelling are yackers. You know, people who talk incessantly, going on and on no matter where they are or what they're doing. They think everyone wants to listen to them, when nothing could be further from the truth. It's one thing to be excited about something, but quite another to yack all the time.

When I give my initial briefing at the beginning of each tour, to ensure that everything goes smoothly, I always make a point of reminding my tour members to try not to get on one another's nerves. We're travelling in close quarters. But the yackers never seem to get it. They're so full of their own importance that they assume what I say doesn't apply to them. I think I'm a tolerant person—in my job, I have to be—but even I can't put up with that nonsense for long. I love good conversation and light banter as much as anyone, but not when it's one-sided.

The weird thing is how offended some of these people get when I eventually take them aside and diplomatically ask them to think of others. It doesn't seem to occur to them how offensive their constant nattering is, or how unpopular they're making themselves.

One of the worst was a woman from Vancouver on a recent tour who talked all the time, and loudly. Everything was about her. She never let up, no matter where we were. It was extremely wearing for the other tour participants. Needless to say, I've since dropped her (and a few others) from my mailing list. She'll never be welcome on another David Skillan tour. I don't need her on another trip, and neither do my other clients. She can keep her business, thank you very much. As a tour leader, I can't change someone in two or three weeks—nor should I be expected to—but I can make it clear that such unnecessary, boorish behavior will not be tolerated.

Fortunately, there's a responsibility clause in most travel documentation that says anyone who impedes the smooth running of the tour—in other words, spoils it for others—may be removed from the tour. And most people who sign up for my tours are considerate, understanding, and appreciative, thank god. Enough said.

EXPLORING WASHINGTON—Recently I had an opportunity to spend a day in Washington, DC. It was my first time in the American capital, and I wish it had been longer. It's a beautiful city with so much to see. It would be easy to spend five to seven days visiting the most interesting places. There are many reasonably priced hotels, including some downtown for about $75 a night. Most places of interest are within walking distance, or you can do as I did, and hop on an open-top double-decker bus, getting on and off wherever you like. I saw Capitol Hill, the Treasury, the White House, Ford Theatre (where Lincoln was shot), and some of the many museums in the renowned Smithsonian group. The museums are all free of charge. Think about the best time to go. Winter can be harsh, with lots of snow, and summer is hot, humid, and crowded with tourists. The best times to go are spring and fall.

CALIFORNIA-BOUND—A couple of months ago I made my first trip to visit my daughter Julie, son-in-law George, and granddaughter Natalie, and of course their dog Joffre. They're now nicely settled into their new routine, in a cozy cottage in Laguna Beach, California. They have banana trees and birdsong in their garden, and the beach is four blocks away. The town is very pleasant, full of boutiques and galleries.

ANOTHER MILESTONE—Last month I celebrated forty-one years in the travel industry. In March 1970 I escorted my very first tour, a group of sixteen Brits from London to Japan's world fair via India and the Far East. I've been employed in the travel industry in one capacity or another ever since. Few people make much money in the travel business, but you can't beat some of the extraordinary experiences I've had! Money ain't everything!

PACKING HINTS—We all know it's wiser (and easier) to travel light, but nearly everyone over-packs. These days, though, when you have to pay for extra pieces of luggage, it's time to rethink the exercise. First, place everything you intend to take on your bed, then ask yourself whether you really need it all. Is it necessary? Remember, if it should happen to get lost or stolen, most of what you take can be replaced at your destination.

FOR SALE—Over the years, I've accumulated quite a collection of souvenirs, such as wooden and soapstone artifacts and carvings, exotic masks and wall hangings, and framed pictures and maps. Most have been in storage since we moved from our Tsawwassen house to a Vancouver condo several years ago. We just don't have space to display them. Now I've realized it's time to get rid of them. As a number of people have expressed interest in buying some, I hope to have a sale this summer. None of my pieces are particularly valuable, but they're too nice to just give away. I'd like them to find good homes where they'll be treasured. I'll let you know where and when the sale will be, and will include photos of some of the items I'm selling in my next newsletter.

*If you've been dreaming about a big trip, why not just go?
It's not what we do in life that we regret,
it's what we don't do.*

STAYING IN TOUCH—As most of my clients and readers are aware, I've been putting out newsletters for many years as a way of staying in touch with my clients. I enjoy writing them, keeping you in the loop about what I'm doing. Your feedback and comments mean a great deal to me, even though I don't always include them, due to space restrictions. Some I save for future newsletters. So please keep them coming. To be sure you don't miss my occasional tour updates and special deals, such as my upcoming Kenya safari, and to view my newsletters in colour, please be sure I have your current email address. Don't worry, I won't hassle you. It's not my style to do business that way.

While I hate to be left behind in the frantic race for the latest technology, I also refuse to become a slave to it. I don't have an iPad, don't blog, and don't do Facebook. Apparently I'm not alone! As actor George Clooney is reported to have said in 2009, "I'd rather have a rectal examination on live TV by a fellow with cold hands than have a Facebook page." At my age, I don't have a need to know or tell others what I had for breakfast this morning or for dinner last night. But who knows? Things might change, and I may just break down and treat myself to a Canadian-made Blackberry. Meanwhile, I happily stay in touch with clients and friends through newsletters and emails, and I'm starting to use Twitter in a small way to send out timely updates. Please follow me there: @David_Skillan.

GET MOVING!—If you've been dreaming about a big trip, why not just go? You won't regret it. As the saying goes, it's not what we do in life that we regret, it's what we don't do. And remember that other old quote: procrastination is the thief of time. Never one to let grass grow under my feet, I'm doing everything while I can. Shouldn't you be doing the same?

Maybe you're contemplating a big trip, but don't know where to start. We make it simple by offering the finest tours at fair prices. As well as seeing some of the world's greatest sights, we stay in some wonderful places, from delightful to deluxe. Few other tour managers can match my experience. And unlike many in the travel industry, who merely wave you goodbye, I go with you every step of the way, making sure your trip of a lifetime unfolds the way it should.

I invite you to plan your great escape now. Come with me somewhere in this exciting world soon! I guarantee you'll have the time of your life, and return home with unforgettable memories.

If you have any friends or family who'd like to receive my newsletters and periodic tour updates, please send me their email (or postal) addresses. And please pass this newsletter to anyone you think may be interested.

Kwaheri (goodbye for now in Swahili), and mind how you go!

Excerpts from Recent Emails, Cards, and Letters

"Thought you'd like to see the video of drunken elephants and monkeys high on marula fruit, which brought back so many great memories of our time in South Africa. Still dreaming of another trip with you, but only time will tell—and, of course, finances! South Africa and Victoria Falls still top the list of all our travel experiences. Those going with you are in for a treat."

~Don and Dolores S. (Victoria, BC)

"Thank you so much for the emails and pictures. The trip to Kenya and Tanzania was amazing, and I will remember it forever. I look forward to your letters regarding future travels, and will pass them on to others."

~Trish D. (Vancouver, BC)

"Our recent trip to Uganda was more spectacular than I'd hoped. It was so nice to reconnect with you. Many thanks for all your efforts for a wonderful safari. I'm now considering my next David Skillan adventure!"

~Susan M. (North Vancouver, BC)

You certainly draw a fun following!*

"You were such a gracious host, and expert in putting together a tremendous itinerary with a flawless delivery. You certainly draw a fun following! Please add Larry's and my names to your fan club. We are now dedicated promoters—though we don't want you to be so popular that there will be no space for us in the future!"

~Sharon M. (Fort Langley, BC)

"Thanks so much for the photos. Botswana was marvelous. I'm pretty sure we all agree on that. Loved everything about the camps, not to mention the wildlife and birds. And it's pretty hard to go wrong spending time in the Cape."

~Pam D. (Victoria, BC)

"We have spent many hours over the last couple of months downloading, editing, and enjoying our pictures taken on the Kenya and Tanzania safari. What a fantastic trip!"

~Mel and Audrey B. (New Westminster, BC)

"We thoroughly enjoyed ourselves on the Botswana trip, and both of us fell in love with Africa. We wonder why it's taken us so long to get there. We're both back to work, slightly jet-lagged, but very happy for our wonderful African experience. We look forward to catching up with you and the other tour members at the summer reunion."

~Marg and Nick W. (Calgary, AB)

"Thanks for the always interesting newsletters. You definitely have itchy feet and an insatiable curiosity. I shall never forget my two trips to Africa. Who knows where and when we shall meet again? Mom is interested in your Namibia trip, which sounds enticing."

~Vicki S. (Prince George, BC)

"Thanks for your latest newsletter and tour update. We are interested in two or three of them—Cambodia/Vietnam and Turkey—but want to do another safari most of all."

~Lois and Norm B. (New Westminster, BC)

"Uganda was a marvelous trip, often a little hectic, but most interesting and exciting. It will be nice to spend quiet time sorting my photos and refreshing the memories. You have a delicate job, which you handle with skill and tact."

~Alan P. (Richmond, BC)

"Am interested in your Vietnam and Cambodia tour, and also your trip to Namibia. One place I haven't seen but am especially keen to visit is Madagascar. I'd rather go there with you than some tour organizer I've never heard of!"

~Marlene W. (Osoyoos, BC)

(Marlene has been on eight of my tours, and has every intention of making it ten! As she wants to go to Madagascar, we might add that as an optional extension at the end of our Namibia Journey next year. Anyone else interested? ~DS) ↗
